

By Gitty Adler

Hello hello, will you take your seats
And hold on to your Purim treats
Listen and watch as we give you a feel
For the story of Purim, how it happened in real!

The Jews lived in Persia
And Achashverosh was the king!
He thought he was in charge of everything!

Here he is in his palace
Partying like crazy.
Achashverosh might have been no good,
But he sure wasn't lazy!

Here he is telling Vashti
To come right away
But she says, "Not me! Never! No way!"

Here he is looking for a brand new queen
He was looking for a special girl
She was nowhere to be seen!

Esther is the new queen, the one the king chose!
She won't say that she's Jewish
So nobody knows!

This is Mordechai, the leader of the Jews,
He overhears some terrible news

These two servants want Achashverosh gone!

He quickly tells Esther, to pass it all on.

Achashverosh's life is saved. Oh yes, how good!

He writes down in his book as fast as he could

That Mordechai the Jew, saved the king's life,

By sending a message to Esther his wife.

Haman meanwhile is bossing everyone about

Telling them to bow to him

If they don't, they're out

Well Mordechai the Jew stands straight and tall. He does not bend, not a bit, not at all.

Haman is angry. He is finding out why

The only one who won't bow down is Mordechai

Because he's a Jew he won't bow down?

Well why do we need Jews in town?

Haman starts plotting to think of a way

To destroy all the Jews, everywhere, on one day

The King gives permission. He says, "Sure Haman, I let!"

So 13th Adar is the day Haman set.

Mordechai hears the news and cries and cries

He wears sackcloth and ashes in front of everyone's eyes.

Mordechai begs Esther to do what she can

To save the Jewish people from this terrible plan

Here's Esther, after fasting and praying,
Entering the room where the king is staying,
Inviting him to a feast with Haman and then,
Once they're all at the feast she invites them again.

Here is Achashverosh, laying in his bed
He just cannot fall asleep, he has too much on his head.
Achashverosh reads that Mordechai did something so good
And he plans to reward him as soon as he could.

Here he is at Esther's feast the very next day,
He asks Esther, what would you like? Tell me right away!

"I'm Jewish, cries Esther! And someone is planning to totally wipe out My entire nation!" Gasp goes the king, "what's this all about!?"
"Who is this fellow who dares to make such a plan?"
"Says Esther, its Haman, he is an evil man!"

Haman is taken away, and it gets better than that,
The Jews win their enemies, they win them flat,
So Purim became a happy holiday,
One that we celebrate to this very day!