We can thereby find another solution:

On the outside we'll have a camp, but on the inside, it'll be a Yeshiva. Begashmiyus, It'll be very good there, with all the things that other camps have, and along with this they will learn there like they do in Yeshiva—utilizing this opportunity for kedusha.

Here there is an advantage over their studies of the rest of the year—for in those few weeks the students are 1. free from learning secular subjects, and 2. they also won't have there, the mothers who spoil their children, something which is neither healthy physically nor spiritually for the child.

Being that camp takes place outside the city—and there is no disadvantage of yeshivas kerachim, the children aren't at home and they don't need to learn secular studies – in the course of a few weeks they can accomplish what is accomplished in the course of a few months in Yeshiva in the city.

We only have to ensure that the teachers that will be there with the children will not drag themselves after the children - like the saying in Russia "the old (behave) like the young" - for then, not only will they not influence the children (for the good), but rather—they themselves, will go around in clothing like the Kohanim, in shorts "from the hips to the thigh" and play ball! So therefore we must have a promise from within that it'll be a Yeshiva.

July 19 - ג' מנחם אב

When you gather at the conclusion of the summer vacation which you spent in camp, you have the opportunity to look back and evaluate what was accomplished during the past weeks.

The purpose of a vacation is to rest and to gain new physical strength. At the same time there is a more fundamental and essential reason, that the healthy body will improve the perfection of the soul.

It is human nature that for the body to perform properly it must be rested and strong, only then will the person be able to serve G-d with calmness, ease, joy and a glad heart. This is true for those mitzvos done primarily by the body — as well as the mitzvos dependent on the soul. The body must help the soul observe its mitzvos.

Having attained the goal of a restful vacation in camp, when you return home you must apply yourselves with renewed vigor to Torah study and observing mitzvos with happiness and joy.

(22 Menachem Av 5746)

"You have now just ended your stay in summer camp, in which you were together with men (and women) dedicated heart and soul, with true self-sacrifice, to the education of Jewish children."

(talk to the children, 1 Elul 5744)

ב' מנחם אב - July 18

This is also the main purpose of your camping experience: The “world” (the “man in the street”) generally thinks that going to camp is something that comes after the school year is over and done with, when it is time to take a break from learning (G-d forbid); and that the summer camp has no other purpose than to strengthen the health of the body.

However, contrary to this mistaken view, the purpose of “Gan Israel” (and likewise of other truly Jewish camps) is to show that the time one spends in camp is also a time of education and spiritual advancement.

Moreover, since the commandment of “love your fellow as yourself” is the Golden Rule of the Torah — the child coming back from camp shares his, or her, experience with other children, and in addition to talking about it also shows a living example to other children, thus helping them in their education as well. So that they, too, will know that camping time is a time for advancing in Torah learning and in the fulfillment of the Mitzvos, and in all matters of Yiddishkeit.

This, therefore, is the main purpose and achievement of every Jewish camp, and particularly of the camps bearing the name “Gan Israel...” And the campers, on their part, must know that the purpose of staying at Camp Gan Israel and similar camps is to take along with them the experience of the camp — all that has been learned and achieved there — and use it throughout the year, in the everyday life, for their own benefit and for the benefit of others, in accordance with the teaching of the Baal Shem Tov, as mentioned above.

ח' תמוז - June 25

...Until it accomplishes that when the children will return home—they'll change over their houses too, that they too will be as they should.

Hashem should help, that the camp will have hatzlacha both physically and spiritually, that when the children return home the menaholim of Camp Gan Yisroel will be able to say, “These are the great ones that we've raised.” And then, the parents will ask to enroll their child to camp again next year.

And it's clear that whoever can help with this, should surely help. This is not bittul Torah, but the opposite—it's the strengthening of Torah.

Hashem should give them supernatural success, and they should be more and more successful from year to year, “until Shiloh comes”, Moshiach, and then they'll take the whole camp—the field, with the shul, with the finances, with the lake, to Eretz Yisroel, with Moshiach, speedily in our days

“..עד כי יבוא שילה (משיח), וואס יעמולט וועט מען מיטנעמען דעם גאנצען קעמפ, די פעלד מיטן שול, מיט די ווירטשאפט להבדיל, מיטן לייק, קיין ארץ ישראל ת"ו ע"י משיח צדקנו במהרה בימנו”.

(Shavuot 5716)

June 26 - ט' תמוז

...The registration of children in Torah camps is most important. During the school year the home plays an important role in the child's upbringing. No matter what he hears at school, his parents can correct his impressions and teach him Torah when he comes home. Camp, on the other hand, completely occupies the child. He is totally dependent on the camp environment — the parents don't know what is happening to him until he returns home. Therefore, it is most necessary that the camp environment be according to Torah.

Hence, it is fitting to stress that the children are the foundation of our people now, during the festival which marks the birth of the Jewish nation. Just as they were the ones who negated the decree of Haman, they will negate all the undesirable decrees at present by following Torah. We must try, and the children themselves must try — for the hearts of the fathers will be turned by the children — to enroll children in a “happy and kosher” summer camp.

Particularly teachers and educators must take part in this effort. They must influence the children to demand that their parents send them to a Torah camp. In this way the “vacation” will not be (heaven forbid) a vacation from Torah and Mitzvos. By sending children to a Kosher camp we will raise Kosher sons and Kosher daughters, and go with happiness and joy to greet Moshiach....

(22 Nissan, 5740)

July 17 - א' מנחם אב

The proof that we have not forgotten that the temporary break is to enable us to do better in our studies is:

1. That even during vacation we do not cease our learning entirely. Every day we separate at least a bit of time, not only to review what we've previously learnt but also to learn new insights and acquire new knowledge.
2. Being that during vacation we meet our friends or new people that are not in the same school as us, we try to influence them to learn Torah, and to fulfill the purpose of the Torah learning—to do Mitzvos.

(24 Sivan, 5717)

In such summer camps [such as those mentioned above] there is stronger emphasis that physicality and spirituality are not in contradiction and conflict with each other, on the contrary, they help one another - for a healthy and rested body comes together with an increase in holy matters. These two aspects together create a healthy and successful summer camp in both physical and spiritual matters.

(19 Sivan 5750)

July 16 - כ"ט תמוז

When moving from one stage to another in education, we have breaks—for example, in the summer, we have vacation. However, in truth, this is not a break but rather a preparation for us to continue learning afterwards.

We can compare this to an athlete, who when he needs to jump over a large object, he must first take a few steps back, and only then is he able to jump over the tall and imposing object. If he would not step back a few paces, he would never be able to jump over the stone.

The fact that he takes the steps backwards is not counter-active to his moving forward. Rather this is what's enabling him to overcome all the obstacles in a better, easier and stronger way.

Similarly with the break from studies in the summer—this is not a hindrance, G-d forbid, to our studies. Rather it's the rest that will enable us to learn with more enthusiasm and success.

We must remember this at the time that we take our break, because this is what will allow us to more easily overcome the obstacles that will come afterwards, both from the yetzer hara and from the person's surroundings.

"All those involved in educating Jewish children deserve great merit for every Jewish child is considered as the only son of G-d Himself."

(13 Sivan 5738)

June 27 - י' תמוז

This must be the goal of educating Jewish children, not only to provide them with information, but primarily to train them to internalize this knowledge and express it in their everyday lives. The resolution to live in this manner will hasten the coming of the Messianic redemption, causing Mashiach to come immediately, so that our summers will not be spent in camp in the diaspora.

If, however, Mashiach's coming is delayed, this time should be used to spread Jewish education in Torah camps, camps which merit the name Gan Yisrael, "the garden of Yisrael," named for Yaakov our Patriarch, who was given this name because "he fought with angels and men and was successful." This legacy is perpetuated in these camps which teach how one should elevate the material aspects of the world rather than be intimidated by them.

19 Sivan 5750

Children are "Tzivos Hashem G-d's army," and a soldier of G-d conducts himself according to G-d's will 24 hours a day, every day....In summer camp, the child is under the influence of the camp 24 hours a day. Hence, when he or she is in a camp that is run according to Torah ideals, he/she are continually growing in all aspects of Torah and mitzvos.

(3 Tamuz 5742)

י"א תמוז - June 28

How important is the education of Jewish children!

When the summer comes and schools close and the kids have more free time, it becomes vitally important that the children's time should not be empty and wasted, it must be filled with wholesome and meaningful content.

There is a very special way to accomplish this: Tell the children stories which have moral lessons and pious content. Play a game with them and show them how the game can emphasize and teach the attribute of kindness and consideration for others.

Take for example the game of "treasure hunt." With this game you can indicate that a Jew must always hunt and search for his/her inner "treasure," as well as the "treasures" of the world...The Holy One, Blessed be He, says to every Jew, you are an entire world and in you may be found precious gems and pearls of spirituality. This is the most precious and valuable thing in existence. The Jew has the G-d-given mission to reveal this hidden treasure in himself and others.

You must use a gentle approach, attracting with the "right hand," and making yourself a living example. Even those who are not involved in formal education must also educate themselves and then influence the attitudes of schools, the home and even the environment...

כ"ח תמוז - July 15

Since everything in the world, including the name of this camp, is by Divine Providence, we can derive a lesson from the three words of its name.

"Camp" (machaneh): This word is found in the Chumash in the phrase, "According to G-d's word they encamped." The Gemara explains that the word "encamped" implies a type of permanence, although it might last only a short time. This permanence stems from the fact that the encampment was done "according to G-d's word." Similarly the summer camp experience; although it lasts only a short time, it has a lasting effect, since it is run "according to G-d's word," i.e. in the true spirit of Torah and mitzvos.

"Gan" ("garden"): The function of a garden is not merely to provide a haven, but rather to be a source of pleasure and enjoyment. The camp, as a source of pleasure for G-d, serves as a microcosm for the entire universe, which is also meant to be a "garden," i.e. a place of enjoyment. This idea also finds expression in the children themselves, who learn to fulfill Torah and mitzvos with a feeling of pleasure, which in turn causes G-d pleasure.

"Yisrael": This stresses the connection of the Jewish people to Torah, since the word forms the acronym, "yesh shishim ribo osiyos l'Torah" ("The Torah has 600,000 letters").

(20 Av 5743)

כ"ז תמוז - July 14

This concept contains a special lesson for those who are planning to spend the next weeks involved with the education of Jewish children. They may encounter children who have as of yet not received a true understanding about Yiddishkeit. Also, it is possible they will have desires for things that are opposed to Yiddishkeit.

It is possible that the teacher will think, — being that he (or she) is only one person, and in his class or bunk there are so many children — how is it possible for him to accomplish that in every child it should be openly recognizable that this is a child of whom G-d says ““You shall be a land of delight.” This is a child from whom G-d has pleasure. The teacher knowing that it is his responsibility to bring the good qualities of the child about, can become frightened from the nature of the child — he sees that the child has some bad qualities and traits.

We tell him that he need not become frightened from his mission. G-d is with him and helps him carry out the mission. On the verse, “You will be a land of delight,” the Baal Shem Tov commented: that just as the land contains within jewels and great treasures. Similarly, each Jewish soul possesses great treasures. This is the task of every educator and counselor: to reveal the great treasures that each Jewish child possesses and to develop the child to the point where he, together with his parents and the entire Jewish people, can use them in the best way possible.

י"ב תמוז - June 29

...As teachers and camp counselors, it will be demanded of you to expend limitless and inexhaustible energy. A monumental task indeed, but one which will be richly rewarded. For the act of teaching a child is not a momentary act which ends when the class is over. When that little bit of knowledge you impart effects an increase in the child's actions, you have planted a seed which grows and continues to bear fruit, just as if you plant a fruit-bearing tree. And when this child grows older and also becomes involved with teaching and spreading Yiddishkeit, this single seed continues to nourish him and others as well. This occurs when just one thing is imparted to one child; how much greater is the reward if the teacher imparts many things to many children.

In the course of your formal studies you have learned what and how to teach children, knowledge which must be used during your vacation to benefit each child. This is not only in the best interests of the child, but the counselor as well. For it is Hashem's mission and He is the source of all blessing. And of Jewish children He has said: “My son, My first-born Israel” and “Sons you are to Hashem your G-d.” And as the Baal Shem Tov said and the Previous Rebbe emphasized, “Each child is to Hashem, as a single son, born to parents in their old age.”

This venture will meet with great success, for you are doing a favor to G-d's only sons and daughters. Success will be granted to all counselors and teachers and those who are preparing themselves to be counselors, teachers, and Akeres haBayis.

י"ג תמוז - June 30

...Therefore, there should be a stress on Jewish education, particularly camps. Especially since we have drawn one year closer to the coming of Mashiach, it is proper to make every effort to ensure that not one Jewish child suffer the "Galus" of a non-Torah-oriented educational system. Even if that system does not oppose Torah, still, if that system is not Torah oriented, it is not fit for a Jewish child.

The last statement can be best understood when viewed in the light of the Baal Shem Tov's description of the Jew's relationship to G-d as that of an only son born to a King in his old age. Just as in physical things, the King's son is treated with utmost care, and given only the best, so, too, and even to a greater degree, in spiritual matters (for these nourish both the body and the soul) must extreme care be taken to ensure what is most appropriate, and in this case, a Torah-oriented education must be received by each and every Jewish child.

The above is particularly true in the early childhood years when, as is well known, an individual's behavioral pattern is fixed. The physical example of a seed expresses this concept clearly. When a seed is first planted, the slightest things done to improve its condition result in major changes in the tree, its fruit, and the trees which will grow from its fruit in later years.

...Similarly, regardless of the unapparent immediate effect on the child (particularly when just like in the example of the seed, the positive efforts are not seen immediately), each small step to improve his Jewish education is of extreme importance.

(Shabbos Mevarchim Iyar, 5738)

כ"ו תמוז - July 13

The first step in stimulating someone's interest in Jewish education is to stimulate your own interest. In addition whatever you say or whatever activities you expose a child to, the most effective means of educating and influencing a child (particularly when your aim is to teach attitudes and moral principles) is to provide him with a living example of the behavior which you desire from him.

A vibrant, personal model will motivate the child to emulate his teacher's behavior in school, and, more important, often make a deep enough impression to affect the child's behavior at home as well. A teacher who serves as a model and personal example can influence the way a child acts for years, and in many cases, even for a lifetime.

"קעמפ איז א קאוואדלע וואס מ'קאוועט אויס אויף אים חסידים. פריער איז דאס געווען אין ליובאוויטש אין תומכי-תמימים, דערנאך אין קרעמענטשוג, אין פעטערבורג, אין ראסטאוו, און איצטער אין סוואן-לייק!"

Camp is an anvil, upon which one forges out Chasidim. Previously this was in Lubavitch in Tomchei Tmimim, afterwards in Kremenchuk, Petersburg, and Rostov; and now in Swan Lake!

(Yechidus with R' Eliyahu Lipskier)

נ"ה תמוז - July 12

This is accomplished when a person, even a young child, before drinking a glass of water, declares that "everything came into being through His speech." Although he is merely drinking a glass of water, he proclaims how the entire creation is brought into being by G-d. Through this activity, revealing G-dliness throughout the creation as a whole, a creation derives pleasure.

To fulfill this mission, it is not necessary that a Jew study much Torah or fulfill many mitzvos, on the contrary, every Jew — even a young child — can accomplish this when he follows the educational guidelines given him by his parents. (During the summer, this role is fulfilled by the counselors in camp, who explain to the children the importance of reciting blessings and reciting the Shema before retiring.)

This is the purpose of education to lay down the fundamental basis for a person's thinking processes and conduct. Thus, a child should be educated to look at all the entities in G-d's world as a Jew should, to appreciate that every entity is created by G-d, and "created solely for His glory."

(Rosh Chodesh Tamuz, 5751)

“זאל דער אויבערשטער געבן אז דער קאמפ זאל אויס-
האדעווען געזונטע מיידלאך און דערנאך זאל זיי בויען
אידישע הייזער און חסידישע הייזער”

(visit to camp emunah 5716)

י"ד תמוז - July 1

Tell the small children to make their rooms a mini-Sanctuary by placing a Chumash, Siddur and Tehillim, as well as a pushka there. They will do it with enthusiasm and verve, then they will study from the books and give charity and they will actually create Eretz Yisrael and a Bais HaMikdash in their rooms.

In the summer when children will be in camps:

A) All the children should have a Chumash, Siddur and a pushkah in their rooms.

B) You must teach and train the children properly and diligently when they are in your charge, so that when they go back home after the summer they will carry these good lessons with them.

...May G-d help you all to be successful in your special mission of Jewish education — you certainly have been given all the necessary powers and talents to do your job properly and perfectly — with inner joy and satisfaction.

(19 Sivan 5747)

“Many times, a summer in a camp has influenced a non-religious child to bring his entire family closer to Yiddishkeit.”

(22 Nissan 5739)

ט"ו תמוז - July 2

The idea of, "his Torah was his profession," is particularly relevant to Jewish children. A grown person, particularly after marriage, must spend part of his time earning a living. Children, because their needs are provided for by their parents, can utilize all their time for Torah study.

The above lesson is especially important now, close to the summer vacation, when children are registered in summer camps. You children should ask your parents to register you in a summer camp, where you can utilize every free moment for Torah study and fulfillment of mitzvos.

To the parents who are here, we turn with a request — in the name of Rashbi — that they should register their children in summer camps where they will receive the best education — utilizing all their free time for Torah study, thereby giving great satisfaction to G-d.

Consonant to the command, "You shall love your fellow as yourself," parents should not only register their own children in camp, but also endeavor to see that other children are also registered. Children, too, should influence their friends to spend their summer in a camp permeated with the spirit of "his Torah is his profession." ...

(18 Iyar, 5743)

כ"ד תמוז - July 11

And then the Mishnah proceeds to its final statement, "Make a fence around the Torah." Since we were entrusted with the holy mission of trying to involve as many students as possible in schools which provide a Torah education, it is possible to think that it might be worthwhile to compromise on certain principles of Yiddishkeit in order to attract those students whose parents are not yet ready to accept total Jewish commitment and observance...

The Mishnah teaches that such a process is destructive. Instead, "put a fence around the Torah." Instead, you should explain to the child that even if at present he is not ready to fulfill all the Mitzvos, he should start with the Mitzvos with which he feels comfortable and ready to perform. At the same time, he should be made aware that there are other Mitzvos, and that performance of one Mitzvah leads to another. Fulfilling the one Mitzvah makes it easier to fulfill the next Mitzvah, etc. until he is willing to fulfill all the Mitzvos.

(13 Sivan 5738)

"In Gan Yisroel, one is in the property of the Rebbe for a few consecutive weeks, without any disruption."

(Shabbos P' Shelach, 5719)

July 10 - כ"ג תמוז

...Many times, the first impression a teacher receives from a student can be misleading and injurious to the child's growth.

The first and therefore most important and fundamental lesson the Torah teaches us is "be patient in judgment." Before you decide how to deal with a child and what type of schedule to give him, you have to apply yourself and involve yourself in his personal situation. You have to devote all of your energies to attempt to determine the proper manner to structure the educational process of this child whom G-d has entrusted to you.

The Mishnah's second statement "Develop many students" can be interpreted in this manner; You can't satisfy yourself with a limited number of students and ignore other potential students, hoping that someone else will take care of them. As long as there is one Jewish child who is not receiving a proper Jewish education, the Torah teaches and commands each individual to devote himself to him, not to spare time or energy in bringing as many students as possible into your school or class.

It is true that such activities will put a strain on you — your heart and soul are limited. However, when your intent is to carry out the mission with which G-d has entrusted you, then He provides you with added strength and vigor.

July 3 - ט"ז תמוז

As was mentioned several times, there is a special advantage in the education that is received in the summer camps, one that is even greater than the education that is received in the schools. Being that in the summer camps the child is found in an atmosphere of Judaism and holiness throughout the 24 hours of the day (not only for a few hours a day as in school) and not just for one day, but for a continuous period, i.e. several weeks, it is understood that in such an environment the educational affect is much greater. So much so that during this period he goes from "strength to strength" in all aspects of Judaism and holiness.

(22 Sivan, 5745, 1985)

If we speak words from the heart they will penetrate the heart, — and it will accomplish that all Jewish children will not minimize their Torah study during vacation, on the contrary — they are free of secular studies, and must increase in Torah study.

Time for play, to strengthen the body: This, too, is holy. But some time must be added to Torah study and Mitzvah observance....

(12 Tamuz, 5745)

י"ז תמוז - July 4

...this idea is hinted to in the name of the summer camp—Gan Yisroel. Gan—the garden of Hashem, meaning the place where Hashem has pleasure, for He has true pleasure from each and every one of the campers, and all the more so from the counselors (madrichim and madrichois), and even more so from those who merit to run the summer camps in a way of continuously adding light...

...And how lucky is their portion, and how great is the merit of the teachers and counselors who are involved in chinuch, and thus prepare themselves to be involved in the education of Jewish children, on a solely pure foundation.

”ואשרי חלקם וגדול זכותן של המורות והמדריכות שהתעסקו בהחינוך”

(19 Sivan, 5750)

כ"ב תמוז - July 9

The summer is a time for rest and vacation. It is obvious, though, that the goal is not rest in itself, but rather to refresh oneself and gather strength in order to increase in Torah and mitzvos in the following year.

This must be done in a such a way that the individual feels joy, and that we bring joy to G-d Himself, as the verse says, “G-d rejoices with His creations.” In a day camp, we cause G-d joy by creating a holy atmosphere, and, in addition to resting, devoting a portion of the day to prayer, Torah study and the performance of mitzvos. Since the camp is away from the busy city, this can be done with even more energy and liveliness. The rest is therefore more complete, and adds to one’s success in the coming year.

(2nd Day Rosh Chodesh Elul, 5743)

This free time must be utilized in order to add in Judaism, the Torah and its Mitzvos, the love of Hashem and the fear of Hashem. Specifically regarding the involvement in the educational guidance of Jewish children, the children's free time is to be directed (during the summer vacation) to add in Torah and Judaism.

(17 Sivan, 5749, 1989)

כ"א תמוז - July 8

Another one of the signs of life is energy and vitality, the inability to remain at rest. This quality is also more manifest in children. Adults seek rest at times. In contrast, a child is always active, always busy. A lack of activity runs contrary to the child's basic nature.

Parents and educators must find the means to channel this energy in a positive direction. Even though they personally may seek rest, they must acknowledge the natural vitality of the children and find the means to direct that energy to positive outlets, allowing the child to proceed from strength to strength in the service of G-d.

In this context, it is proper to take notice of the many children who are participating in this farbrengen. They are making proper use of their vacation.

In this country, there is a strange custom that in the summer, schools and to a certain extent, even Yeshivos, cut down their regular schedules of activities. However, we can compensate for this by sending the child to a summer camp which will infuse him with the spirit of the living Torah...

Therefore, to emphasize their connection with life, let them and their teachers and counselors say LeChaim and sing together a happy Niggun. May their song lead to the ultimate song to be sung at the Messianic redemption, may it be speedily in our days.

(20 Av, 5745)

י"ח תמוז - July 5

How do we say it in English ,give them a cheer or triple hooray I dont know how we say it ,I don't have good English. (One person asked what to announce to all the chassidim) "That we should give them a cheer with a hooray three times for all that are in Gan Yisroel . . . Nuuuu say it in English." (The person asked again what he should announce) "That we should give a cheer that all that are in Gan Yisoel the boys and the GIRLS, the COUNSELORS, with hooray three times! Choose what you want, just make sure it's in English, NUUUU with a Chicago english!!" Afterwards the Rebbe said Give three cheers!

So the Rebbe said "for who, for what?" for those that are going to Gan Yisroel, and for those that are sponsoring Gan Yisroel Afterwards the Rebbe added "For the hanhalah, for the COUNSELORS!!! NUU say horray three times NUUU" (The whole crowd said Hooray 3 times)

"אז מ'זאל געבען א cheer מיט א hooray דריי מאל, די אלע וואס זיינען אין 'גן ישראל' נו?! זאגט דאס אף ענגליש...אמר הרבי - וועמען? וואס? מיט די הנהלה, מיט די מדריכים...נו, זאגט דריי מאל hooray נו..." וצעקו כולם ג' פעמים !

(13 Tamuz 5719)

י"ט תמוז - July 6

....Upon graduation you conclude one cycle of Torah study and now you assume the role of teaching and guiding others in Torah study and practical observance of mitzvos, especially the education and training of children.

By Divine Providence the coming week will provide you with the opportunity to educate children (in summer camps) and to prepare them for the approaching school year so that they will gain even more than they did in the past.

...In speaking of education and preparing children for the coming school year, there is a unique mission delegated to Jewish women and girls — even young girls: Every girl and especially every married woman has, by nature, the inner, potential powers, senses and attributes needed to educate herself and to train others — it begins with the feminine traits of gentleness.

Proper education must commence primarily with the approach of attracting with the “right hand,” and only then can the elimination of negative traits follow. Remember, undesirable attributes are not an integral part of a Jew’s true essence, they are only superficial and temporary....

...It follows then that a Jewish woman must first make herself a living example so that she may become “the mistress (foundation) of her home,” and, therefore, as she grows and matures she must first educate herself, so that when the appropriate time comes, she will be a living example and illuminate her surroundings and her own children.

(17 Sivan, 5746)

כ' תמוז - July 7

The influence and education of a proper summer camp can be much greater even than a good school...A camp where the spirit of holiness and Yiddishkeit envelops the child all the time, without interruption, can make an enormously good impression on the mind and soul of the child.

A day camp can also have more good influence than school. School is something the parents make him attend; the child would rather play, so during class he longs for the free time when he can go out again and play. But he wants to attend camp. There, in addition to studies, he will have games and other activities which he enjoys. So the religious influence will penetrate deeper into his open and receptive heart.

Thus, all effort should be expended to influence parents to send their children to camps where they will receive maximum exposure to holiness and spiritual values.

In material matters the parents surely want to give their children the maximum. They should understand that in spiritual matters it is even more vital. And if the choice is between a camp where the material comforts will be maximal but the spiritual services will be minimal, or vice versa, they should opt for the camp with the spiritual maximum.

Without spiritual values the material is worthless! This is especially evident in present times, when we see the result of children growing up without spiritual values.
